

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a method of requirements traceability based on a UML model, and it is characterized in that during the modeling, when creating an element of a model, a requirement is immediately placed on this element, and same is systematically filled in with the upward requirement which has given rise to the creation of this element.